

John & Joseph Poe

The most confusing part is that there is a Joseph S. Poe b: 1784 and a Josephus F. Poe b: 1822. There is also a John Poe b: 1775 and a John Poe b: 1785. I find that most people have the two Joseph Poe's and two John Poe's mixed up quite badly. Also, the two John's both married a Sarah.

David Sr. (son of Simon Poe, Jr) had a son name John b: 1775 and a son named Joseph S. b: 1784 note that birth years are a year apart for Joseph S. (1784) and John (1785)

James S. Poe, Sr b: 1740 (son of Simon Sr.) had a son name John b: 1785

John (son of David Sr) b: 1775 had a son named Josephus F. Poe b: 1822.

Documentation on John Poe b: 1785 – this John married Sarah Threet

Along with the family of John's brother, Simon Poe (1782), a large group of settlers came by wagon from Fayette County, Alabama to Saline (now Grant) County, Arkansas about 1852 establishing the community of Belfast– chosen because of a natural spring at the site. Warren Holiman, ancestor of Sarah Elizabeth Holiman, my great-grandmother, wife of John Poe's grandson, William Elkin Poe, led the expedition. The community was relocated in the late 1800s. Nothing remains at the original site but a marker– now inaccessible on land owned by a hunting club. John and Sarah along with several of their children and other relatives are buried in Poe Cemetery, Grant County, Arkansas.

Birth date as stated on replaced tombstone (presumably stated on the original. According to census records, he may have been born earlier)

Buried at Poe Cemetery, near Sheridan, Grant County, Arkansas (Grant was formerly part of Saline County). Founder of this cemetery.

That John Poe was son of James Simon Poe is inferred from census records and evidenced by testimonials of aged individuals from Tuscaloosa and Fayette Counties, Alabama published in genealogical journals. Additional evidence comes from interviews with family members in Arkansas and the fact that John Poe arrived in Arkansas with relatives, children and grandchildren of another son of James S. Poe (including Simon B. Poe and Calvin C. Poe, whose descendants were interviewed by this researcher). Finally, the Threet family is from the Pee Dee River area of South Carolina, bordering Anson County, North Carolina where the Poe plantation of James S. Poe was located according to census and land records.

The strongest indication that John Poe was brother of Simon Poe and Rebecca Poe is the will of Jeremiah Guin. He mentions his crop at Simon Poe's and refers to John Poe as "my brother". See Jeremiah Poe for transcript. see: <http://www.mindspring.com/~poefamily/JohnPoe.htm>

John Poe was the son of Major James Poe, a Revolutionary war veteran.

John and Sarah Threet moved to Arkansas in 1850. Sarah Threet was from South Carolina along the Pee Dee River near the Poe land in North Carolina. They brought 20 slaves to Arkansas. John weighed over 300 pounds and had a bad leg. He sat in a chair made especially for him. The slaves would take him as far as they could go in a wagon and then carry him in some kind of carrier so he could look over the farm (information from Bertha Byrd). "Doc" Walton (see Alma Poe) added that John was well-known as a money lender and made considerable profit charging interest on loans. John (1785-1859) and Sarah Threet (1794-1861) are buried at Poe cemetery in Grant County, Arkansas at the site of the original settlement of Belfast (old Belfast). The community relocated to "new" Belfast when the railroad bypassed the old settlement. After the Civil War, logging companies built railroads into the area and denuded the land of all its old growth forests. Today, the area is mostly pine.
